TITLE IV—AMENDMENT TO THE CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT ACT

SEC. 401. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

- (1) Circumstances surrounding the recent death of a young boy named Adam Mann in New York City prompted a shocking documentary focusing on the inability of child protection services to protect suffering children, and this documentary showed the serious need for systemic changes in our child welfare protection system.
- (2) Thorough, coordinated, and comprehensive investigation will hopefully lead to the prevention of abuse, neglect, or death in future instances.
- (3) An undue burden is placed on investigation due to strict Federal and State laws and regulations regarding confidentiality.
- (4) While the Congress recognizes the importance of maintaining the confidentiality of records pertaining to child abuse, neglect, and death, often the purpose of these confidentiality laws and regulations are defeated when they end up protecting those responsible.
- (5) Comprehensive and coordinated interagency communication needs to be established, with adequate provisions to protect against the public disclosure of any detrimental information need to be established.
- (6) Certain States, such as Georgia, North Carolina, California, Missouri, Arizona, Minnesota, Oklahoma, and Oregon have already taken the necessary steps to establish by statute interagency, multidisciplinary fatality review teams to fully investigate incidents of death believed to have been caused by child abuse or neglect with great success. Such teams should be established in every State and their scope of review should be expanded to include egregious incidents of child abuse and neglect before the child in question dies. These teams will increase the accountability of the child protection service.

SEC. 402. MODIFICATION OF CONFIDENTIALITY PROVISION REGARDING STATE GRANTS UNDER CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT ACT.

Section 107(b)(4) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5106A(b)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

“(4) with respect to information received by the State regarding an allegation of child abuse or neglect, establish such authorities and procedures under paragraphs (1) through (3) for the disclosure of the information within and among agencies of the State, and to other entities, as may be necessary—

“(A) to efficiently carry out the duties of the State under paragraph (2) regarding protection of the child involved; and

“(B) to ensure that disclosures of the identity of the subject of a substantiated allegation are made only to the extent appropriate for purposes of such protection;”.

SEC. 403. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.

It is the sense of the Congress that each State should carry out detailed review and reform of the system in the State for protecting against child abuse and neglect, including implementing formal interagency, multidisciplinary teams—

(1) to review all cases of child death where that child was previously known by the State to have been abused or neglected and those incidents of child abuse before the child dies where there is evidence of negligent handling by the State in order to hold the State accountable; and

(2) to make final recommendations regarding the outcomes of individual cases and systemic changes in the State's procedures for protecting against child abuse and neglect.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

BACKGROUND

Federal concern for juvenile justice was expressed as early as 1912, when Congress created the Children's Bureau and authorized it to investigate juvenile courts as well as other issues related to youth. Congress sought to develop a Federal concentration of effort around youth services as early as 1948. Despite presidential requests in 1955 and 1957, no legislation was enacted to help State and local governments address the problem of delinquency until the passage of the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act of 1961. Under this law, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) was authorized to assist States and localities in demonstrating improved methods for the prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

Subsequently, the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act was reauthorized through 1967, and then was replaced by the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention and Control Act of 1968. Broader in scope than its predecessor, the 1968 Act authorized HEW to help States and localities strengthen their juvenile justice programs and to coordinate intergovernmental activities.

In 1968, the Congress also enacted the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act, establishing the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA). Under this Act, prevention and control of delinquency was authorized among the categories eligible for funding by the States. In 1971, Congress amended the Safe Streets Act to focus greater attention on juvenile delinquency.

During 1971, Congress also approved a one-year extension of the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention and Control Act and, in 1972, extended it again for an additional two years. At that time, an attempt was made to more clearly delineate the respective roles of LEAA and HEW. LEAA was to assist programs inside the juvenile justice system, while HEW was to fund prevention programs.

The Crime Control and Safe Streets Amendments of 1973 required still more emphasis on delinquency programs and recognized the need to prevent juvenile crime through coordinated action at all levels of government. Each State planning agency was required to specifically address delinquency in its comprehensive plan.

In 1974, as the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention and Control Act was about to expire, several bills were introduced which would extend or replace it. The Subcommittee on Equal Opportunities of the Education and Labor Committee gave extensive consideration to three bills: H.R. 13737, which would have amended and extended existing law and placed an emphasis on addressing the problems of runaway youth; H.R. 9298, the Runaway Youth Act; and H.R. 6265, which provided for categorical and block grants to States and localities, required submission of a State plan, and mandated that 75% of State funds be passed through to localities.

On June 6, 1974, after holding a series of hearings, the subcommittee reported a clean bill, H.R. 15276, the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974. It was reported by the full Committee on Education and Labor, as amended, on June 12, 1974, and passed the House by a vote of 329 to 20 on July 1, 1974.

Earlier, in the Senate, Senator Bayh introduced S. 3148, the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1972, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. On February 8, 1973, Senator Bayh and Senator Cook reintroduced S. 3148, with modifications, as S. 821. Following a series of hearings, the Subcommittee to Investigate Juvenile Delinquency reported S. 821, as amended, on March 5, 1974. On May 8, 1974 the Judiciary Committee reported the bill, which subsequently passed the Senate on July 25, 1974 by a vote of 88 to 1.

On July 31, 1974, the House considered and passed S. 821, amended, in lieu of H.R. 15276. President Ford signed it into law on September 7, 1974 (P.L. 93-415). The Act provided for an authorization of $350 million and the creation of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) within the Department of Justice, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. Programs funded under Title III of the Act, The Runaway Youth Act, were to be administered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Other provisions of the 1974 Act included the creation of a Federal Coordinating Council to coordinate all Federal juvenile delinquency programs, a National Advisory Committee for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to provide citizen input, and a National Institute for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to conduct training, evaluations, research, and demonstrations.

The Act provided for formula grants to States and local public and private agencies. Special Emphasis Prevention and Treatment grants were also authorized to support innovative delinquency prevention programs and community-based alternatives to incarceration.

The Act further provided that status offenders must not be placed in secure facilities and that juveniles in correctional institutions must be held separately from adults.

In 1977, the Act was reauthorized for three additional years. H.R. 6111 was the primary House bill, incorporating administration amendments, as well as provisions from H.R. 1137, which proposed an additional focus on learning disabled children who become involved in the juvenile justice system. As a result of a strong bipartisan effort, on May 5, 1977, H.R. 6111 was ordered reported to the House by the Committee on Education and Labor by a vote of 34 to 0. On May 19, 1977, H.R. 6111 was considered and passed by the House by a vote of 389 to 5.

In March 1977, Senator Bayh introduced S. 1021 to reauthorize the Act. On April 1, 1977, he also introduced S. 1218, the administration's proposal. The Judiciary Committee reported S. 1021, combining portions of both Senate bills, on May 12, 1977. On June 21, 1977, the Senate considered and passed H.R. 6111, amended, in lieu of S. 1021. President Carter signed H.R. 6111, the Juvenile Justice Amendments of 1977, into law on October 3, 1977 (P.L. 95-115). These amendments added several improvements to the Act including an enhanced role for State advisory groups and new authority in Title III to serve homeless youth.

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 was reauthorized in 1980 for an additional four years. S. 2441 was introduced by Senator Bayh on March 19, 1980 and subsequently considered and approved by the Senate on May 20, 1980. The House bill (H.R. 6704) was introduced by Congressman Andrews on March 5, 1980 and reported by the Committee on Education and Labor on May 13, 1980. On November 19, 1980, the House took up the Senate bill, amended it with the provisions from the House bill, and approved S. 2441, as amended, by voice vote. On November 20, 1980, the Senate approved S. 2441, as amended and approved by the House. On December 8, 1980, President Carter signed the bill into law (P.L. 96-509).

The 1980 amendments changed the provisions of the Act by requiring the States to remove juveniles from adult jails and lockups, establishing OJJDP as a separate administrative entity from LEAA under the general authority of the Attorney General, adding the valid court order exception, and changing the method of distributing funding under the Runaway Youth Act.

In 1984, the Act was again amended and extended for a period of four years. On February 29, 1984, Congressman Andrews introduced H.R. 4971, which was subsequently approved by the Committee on Education and Labor on April 26, 1984 and passed by the House on June 4, 1984. The Senate bill, S. 2014 was introduced by Senator Specter and Senator Hawkins on October 27, 1983 and was approved by the Committee on the Judiciary on May 10, 1984. On August 10, 1984, H.R. 2175, as amended with the provisions of S. 2014, was passed by the Senate. Subsequently, the House and Senate used H.J. Res. 648 (the continuing appropriations bill, 1985) to complete the reauthorization of the Act. H.J. Res. 648 was approved by President Reagan on October 12, 1984 (P.L. 98-473).

The 1984 amendments made a number of changes in the Act including improvements in the Special Emphasis program and the provisions governing the review of applications, an enhanced emphasis on strengthening the family unit, and the addition of a new Title IV, Missing Children's Assistance Act.

In 1988, the Act was amended and extended for an additional 4 years through fiscal year 1992. On March 25, 1987, Congressman Kildee and Congressman Tauke introduced H.R. 1801 which was approved by the Committee on Education and Labor on April 28, 1988. The Senate, as a part of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, passed an amended version of the House bill on October 14, 1988. The House and the Senate subsequently passed H.R. 5210 on October 21, 1988. The bill was signed into law by President Reagan on November 18, 1988 (P.L. 100-690).

The 1988 amendments required the Administrator of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to develop and publish an annual report, expanded the composition of the Coordinating Council, created a Native American pass-through within the formula grant, required States to address efforts to reduce minority overrepresentation in their plans, added a new gang and drug trafficking part with a separate authorization, and required three new special studies to be conducted.

Minor amendments were made to the Act in 1989 and 1990.

NEED FOR THE LEGISLATION

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 authorizes three separate and distinct Federal efforts: Titles I and II contain the juvenile justice provisions and are commonly referred to as the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act; Title III comprises the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act; and Title IV comprises the Missing Children's Assistance Act. Each program has an authorization of appropriations and therefore receives its own line item appropriation. Each program fulfills a unique and important Federal function.

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (JJDPA) authorizes a broad range of activities including Federal policy coordination, research, training, and the development and testing of innovative approaches to prevent or treat juvenile delinquency. The centerpiece of the Act is the formula grant program which allocates funds to the States. In return, the States agree to make improvements in their juvenile justice systems, such as placing status offenders (e.g., runaways and truants) in nonsecure programs rather than detention and removing children from adult jails and lockups. The Act, however, does not specifically prescribe how these goals must be accomplished. Instead, it helps each State make changes and fashion programs that fit its unique needs and circumstances. Additionally, the JJDPA accords a high priority to approaches which maintain and strengthen the family unit.

The result in many States has been that fewer youth are being inappropriately incarcerated and more are receiving treatment in family or community-centered programs, while still protecting the public safety. According to a 1991 General Accounting Office Study, by 1988, States had reduced the number of status offenders and nonoffenders held in secure facilities by 95 percent over their base years. ("Noncriminal Juveniles: Detentions Have Been Reduced But Better Monitoring if Needed," General Accounting Office report to congressional committees, April 1991, 3.) Additionally, according to a 1990 OJJDP report on juveniles taken into custody, the number of juveniles held in adult jails and lockups were reduced by 38 percent over the period from 1983 to 1988.

Testimony and other information presented to the committee, however, clearly indicates that there is still much to be accomplished. Justice Department data shows that, as of 1988, there were still more than 65,000 juveniles held in jails and lockups nationwide. The witnesses testifying before the Committee overwhelmingly argued that continued progress by the States is greatly dependent upon the Federal leadership and resources provided under the JJDPA.

The Runaway and Homeless Youth Act (RHYA), complements State juvenile justice programs by authorizing grants to support runaway shelters, coordinated networks of shelters, and a national hotline. These shelters provide a wide variety of emergency and support services for troubled youth. Because these youth are frequently running away from troubled homes, the shelters attempt to help them by immediately notifying parents and by providing individual and family counseling. According to the Department of Health and Human Services, the RHYA assisted the operation of 343 local shelters which provided shelter and crisis intervention services to approximately 63,000 youth in 1989. Additionally, 51 percent of the youth who received services were reunited with their families, 35 percent were placed in other positive living arrangements such as in the homes of relatives or foster families. Only 9 percent were not positively placed, and information concerning the disposition of the remaining 5 percent is unavailable.

Frequently, the receipt of Federal funding serves as a kind of validation and facilitates efforts to obtain financial support from other sources. As a result, Federal assistance on the average comprises approximately one third of a local shelter's operating budget. Despite a variety of funding sources, testimony before the committee clearly indicated that many of the shelters have not been able to meet local demands for services and that the number of troubled youth and families requiring services continues to increase. Moreover, youth seeking services at runaway shelters increasingly have multiple, serious problems requiring intensive treatment and a wide range of services.

The Missing Children's Assistance Act (MCAA), authorizes support for a range of activities designed to address the difficult issues surrounding the problem of missing children. Generally, these activities are not provided or supported by other Federal programs. Examples include the operation of a toll-free telephone system, a national resource center and clearinghouse, financial assistance to private, nonprofit missing children agencies, and research on topics such as the national incidence of missing children cases. During the period, 1984 to 1987, the national resource center and clearinghouse provided to the public more than 1,700,000 copies of various publications free of charge.

The committee views these important programs as an investment. Those troubled or endangered youth that we can help today are less likely to appear in the juvenile and criminal justice systems later.

For the foregoing reasons, H.R. 5194 proposes a four-year extension of the authorizations of each of these programs and prescribes improvements in their operations as described in the next section.

EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

TITLE I

Purpose

H.R. 5194 amends the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 by adding, as matters of congressional policy, encouragement of parental involvement in treatment and alternative disposition programs and coordination of services between State, local and community-based agencies. The committee heard testimony from a number of witnesses regarding the need to coordinate existing services for juveniles in order to maximize the provision of those services and to increase parental involvement in the rehabilitative process.

Definitions

The bill requires that certain procedures be followed by juvenile courts prior to the issuance of a valid court order and adds new paragraphs defining "comprehensive and coordinated services", "gender-specific services", "hate crime", "home-based alternative services", and "jail or lockup for adults". The amendments relating to the issuance of a valid court order establish a procedure that must be followed to assure that all available resources have been exhausted and that an assessment of a youth's immediate situation be done by an appropriate public agency to protect against returning the youth to an abusive or potentially abusive situation. These procedures are consistent with the practice of the majority of juvenile courts across the country and have been modeled after the procedures currently used in Virginia and New Jersey. The committee does not intend to put any limitations on the authority of judges to enforce valid court orders or to use their statutory and constitutional contempt powers. While the assessment of a youth's situation prescribed by the bill is to be conducted by an appropriate public agency other than a court or law enforcement agency, the assessment team may include court personnel if those individuals are trained professionals in the field of child welfare. The Committee does not intend to exclude from the assessment process those courts which include qualified child welfare professional staff in their proceedings.

Establishment of office

The bill establishes a direct reporting relationship between the Administrator of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) and the Attorney General. The committee heard testimony from Ira Schwartz, former Administrator of the OJJDP, and a number of juvenile justice advocacy groups, including the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, Boys and Girls Club of America, the National Coalition of State Juvenile Justice Advisory Groups, and the National Assembly and National Collaboration for Youth, regarding the need to make the Office more autonomous. Testimony supported establishing a direct reporting relationship between the Administrator of OJJDP and the Attorney General and the need for the Office to independently set an agenda to establish a national policy for juvenile justice. The committee recognizes that under the existing structure the Office has been hampered in achieving those goals. It is also the committee's intent that the Office continue the reciprocal consulting relationship with the National Institute of Justice and the Bureau of Justice Statistics in the development, planning and implementation of juvenile justice programs.

Concentration of effort

The bill requires the Administrator to develop a long term plan for the administration of the Office, which must be reviewed annually and published in the Federal Register, and to issue a set of model standards for providing health care to incarcerated juveniles. Development of a long-term plan allows the Office to better achieve the goals of the Act through the adoption of a national strategy for juvenile justice and delinquency prevention. The committee also received testimony regarding the need for adequate health care services among detained and incarcerated youth and the inadequacy and unavailability of health care services for many of these youth. Currently, various voluntary standards regarding juvenile health care exist. However, compliance with these standards is rare.

In its April 1991 "Adolescent Health" report, the Office of Technology Assessment detailed numerous barriers to providing adequate health care for detained and incarcerated juveniles. As a first step to overcome these barriers, the committee instructs the Administrator to issue institutional health care standards which shall be developed with the guidance of professional medical and health associations, and individuals and organizations which have expertise in adolescent and juvenile health. The standards shall set forth minimal components of an adequate health delivery system necessary to provide care equivalent to or exceeding that which is available in the surrounding community.

The standards should provide guidance on policies and procedures related to: screening and assessment of health needs; medical service delivery (including mental health, substance abuse, and dental services); provision of emergency care; health education and prevention; administrative authority and financial management (including policies to maximize funding opportunities); personnel and training; case management and continuity of care; health records; medical legal issues; and evaluation of the health care system for incarcerated juveniles. The committee also directs the Administrator to provide technical assistance and training to assist States and units of local government to adopt the standards.

Coordinating council

The bill changes the composition of the Coordinating Council by removing certain members and adding to the Council practitioners from the field of juvenile justice. In addition to performing their functions as members of the Council, the practitioners appointed are directed to collectively make their recommendations with respect to the long-term plan. Changing the composition of the Coordinating Council to include practitioners provides for greater support for the Administrator by giving the Administrator better access to those who can best assist in coordinating other Federal juvenile justice activities and in developing a long term strategy in addressing juvenile justice.

Annual review

The bill requires the inclusion of juveniles who are treated as adults for purposes of prosecution in the juveniles custody status reports. With the administration's recent calls for tougher punishment of juvenile offenders, efforts have been made to elevate juveniles to adult status for the purpose of prosecution. The committee believes that this type of information must be collected and analyzed in trying to evaluate the number of certifications, types of offenses, and the impact of certifying juveniles to adult court for certain offenses.

The bill also requires the collection of data on the educational status of juveniles. As studies have indicated, a strong correlation exists between educational failure and juvenile delinquency. The availability of information on the education status of juveniles could help direct prevention and intervention programs in this area.

Allocation

H.R. 5194 requires States to provide one (1) full-time staff person to carry out the State plan. The committee heard testimony from the National Coalition of State Juvenile Justice Advisory Groups regarding the need for States to commit at least one full-time staff person to administer the State plan in order to ensure accountability and continuity in the delivery of services and in maintaining compliance with the mandates of the Act. The Committee believes that this is vital in maintaining the integrity of the Act.

State plan

The bill requires the inclusion in State plans of educational, home-based and family-involved alternative services; methods to reduce language barriers; programs to prevent and reduce hate crimes committed by juveniles; a prohibition on the use of common staff for juvenile and adult facilities and collocation of juveniles and adults in such facilities; an analysis of gender-specific services, rural services, and mental health services; and an assurance that additional funds above 105% of the amount received in fiscal year 1992 be expended on comprehensive and coordinated community systems of services. The bill provides for the reduction of funds through the State formula grant for non-compliance with the Act's four (4) mandates.

When the Congress enacted the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act in 1974, it was felt that two standards should be met: that "status offenders"—those juvenile offenders whose acts would not be considered "offenses" if committed by an adult should not be kept in secure custody; and that juveniles kept in custody should not have regular contact with adult prisoners. An unexpected result of the latter standard was that juveniles were often held in solitary confinement, leading to a suicide rate for juveniles held twelve times that of juveniles not held. By 1980, it became clear that a different standard for securing juveniles was necessary. In July 1980, the National Advisory Committee For Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, in their "Standards for the Administration of Juvenile Justice," recommended that "Detention facilities . . . should not be on the grounds of an institution used to house adults accused or convicted of committing a criminal offense." (Standard 4.26). As a result of that and other recommendations, Congress directed that, with some exceptions, "no juvenile shall be detained or confined in any jail or lockup for adults" (section 223(a)(14) of the Act). The exceptions included a twenty-four hour period for defined rural situations and, in the report accompanying the 1980 amendments, an exception for up to six hours at intake for processing. Even during the exception periods, the Act prohibited regular contact with adults. The regulations developed by OJJDP allow a juvenile detention facility to occupy a part of a building containing a jail or lockup for adults if the juvenile facility is distinctly segregated from adult areas, and if most of the staff serving juveniles is not shared with adults. The committee supports these regulations and recognizes the need to prohibit the use of common staff in that the philosophy, training and methods for working with incarcerated youth are at opposite poles with those of working with adult prisoners. It is the committee's belief that no security or other direct care staff, no matter how well trained, can effectively serve an adult population and then shift gears and effectively serve a juvenile population. It is the committee's intent that this policy be maintained in order to preserve the integrity of the Act.

In December of 1988, Wisconsin Governor Tommy G. Thompson notified OJJDP that Wisconsin was conditionally withdrawing from participation in the state formula grant portion of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act. In June 1989, Governor Thompson notified OJJDP that the State of Wisconsin would not submit a plan for 1989 and would not participate in the Act. In April 1990, the Administrator of OJJDP was asked to reassess Wisconsin's Jail and Lockup Removal Plan. After negotiating a compromise, Wisconsin submitted a revised plan which was approved by OJJDP in July of 1990, providing additional time to complete regulatory and statutory changes necessary to implementing the plan through the issuance of a waiver of termination as authorized under the Act (section 223) and regulations (28 CFR 31.303). This plan specified certain criteria to be met in order for Wisconsin to be in compliance with the Act, and the terms for compliance. Terms agreed to include the use of common staff for both adult and juvenile facilities, provided that the staff is not used in both the adult and juvenile centers at the same time or on the same day, and that such staff be trained and certified to work with juveniles in detention. Such training is to be consistent with national standards for juvenile detention staff.

Although the committee feels that the use of common staff for both juvenile and adult offenders should be prohibited, it also recognizes that the State of Wisconsin entered into an agreement in good faith with the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention and has been in the process of implementing its plan for the past two years. The committee does not consider it appropriate to supplant this agreement but directs the Office to closely monitor the effects it has on juveniles in custody and report the results to the Chair of the House Committee on Education and Labor and the Chair of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary by December 31, 1995.

If the State of Wisconsin fails to meet the requirements of the "Jail Removal Plan" agreement as described in its state plan and as approved by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (confirmed by letter from Robert Sweet, Administrator, to Jerome Lacke, Executive Director, Wisconsin Office of Justice Assistance, dated July 17, 1990) such that the State is no longer in compliance with the terms of the Act and becomes a nonparticipating State, the State would be required, in order to resume participation, to submit a new state plan for approval by the Office under the statutes and regulations in effect at the time of application.

It is also the committee's desire to reaffirm the six-hour "rule of reason" set out in the committee report of 1980 (H. Rept. 96-946, p. 26).

The committee has included a requirement that States include in their State plans an analysis of gender-specific services for the prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency, including the types of such services available and the need for such services for females.

This provision is intended to assure that male and female delinquents receive treatment specific to their unique needs, and to ensure that States address discrepancies in services provided if they exist. The committee believes that gender-specific services are necessary if the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act is going to adequately and fairly service juvenile offenders.

The committee received testimony from national youth organizations, scholars, and service providers recommending that some services be specialized to address the specific needs of female juvenile offenders. One witness, Vicki Burke, spoke of her challenge in creating the PACE Center for Girls in response to the complete absence of services for female juvenile offenders in the State of Florida. Witnesses testified that girls commit different offenses than boys and therefore need different programs to address their behaviors.

Despite the demonstrated need for separate programming, however, female juvenile delinquents are not receiving the services that they need. Instead, most juvenile services are designed to address the needs of more traditional male delinquent behavior. Without services that specifically address the needs of girls as well as boys, girls will not receive the most effective treatment and services possible under the Act.

H.R. 5194 also emphasizes the need for interagency cooperation and collaboration by youth-serving agencies by requiring that any funds a State receives that exceed 105 percent of the amount that the State received in fiscal year 1992 be expended through or for programs that provide a comprehensive coordinated system of juvenile services. A number of Committee witnesses offered testimony with a common theme—the need for better coordination of services for youth. Nevada's Governor Miller, Chairman of the National Governors' Association (NGA) Committee on Justice and Public Safety, testified about the results of an NGA study entitled "Kids in Trouble" which emphasized the need for a continuum of services for youth in the juvenile justice system. Other witnesses testified about the ability to provide better service through interagency cooperation.

J. Dean Lewis, Chief Judge of the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court, Fredericksburg, Virginia, presented testimony regarding Virginia's efforts in implementing a plan that involves the cooperation of local community child-service agencies. That plan includes the use of community councils that provide comprehensive interagency assessment teams and alternatives to court intervention. Sheila Leslie, Executive Director and Michael Dermody, President of the Board of Directors of the Children's Cabinet, Reno, Nevada, also testified about Nevada's efforts in creating a lasting community-wide cooperative effort between the private sector and governmental agencies. The committee intends that these programs be used as a model for those jurisdictions considering implementing cooperative programs.

Currently, if a State is out of compliance with the mandates of the Act, the Administrator may make exceptions under certain circumstances to allow the State to continue to receive formula grant funds for up to three additional years provided that the State has made "an unequivocal commitment to achieving full compliance within a reasonable time," or agrees to expend all of the funds to be received under the formula grant, other than the administrative costs and the amount allocated to the State advisory groups, on achieving compliance with the Act. If compliance is still not met within a reasonable time (not to exceed 3 years) or if the Administrator does not approve the waiver, the funds are terminated. The amendment would allow States to continue to receive funds under the Act while having their total funding reduced 25 percent for each mandate with which they are not in compliance if they expend the remaining funds in an effort to come into compliance. This allows States to continue to provide services to youth while working toward total compliance with the Act.

Given the correlation between educational failure and juvenile delinquency, the committee believes that greater attention must be paid to the educational needs of juveniles while they are incarcerated, with better communication between the youth's base school and the facility in which he or she is currently residing. Too often the education provided to youth has little relation to what is going on in their home schools, which places them at a great disadvantage once they return and increases the likelihood of school failure, truancy and dropping out. Greater communication with respect to the educational needs and problems of incarcerated youth could help keep them in school and decrease juvenile delinquent activity.

Testimony provided at the subcommittee's hearing in Portland, showed that families are often unable to seek and obtain assistance for their children because they do not speak or understand the English language. The committee, therefore, encourages service providers to make a special effort to work with the non-English speaking parents of incarcerated youth, including reference to literacy and other social service programs.

The committee also supports greater family involvement in programs for juvenile offenders and, as such, encourages home-based treatment programs and programs which work with a family during the time a child is incarcerated, including the coordination of services which may be beneficial to the family and efforts to prevent the youth's further involvement in juvenile crime once he or she returns home.

Information function

The bill includes the collection and dissemination of drug and alcohol program and gender-specific program data as part of the clearinghouse functions of the National Institute for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention. This addresses the need to collect and disseminate data on issues that have been included in the mandates of this Act. As indicated previously, the State plan must specifically address the need for gender-specific services and include the development of programs designed to prevent hate crimes as programs and services designed to prevent juvenile delinquency. Collection and dissemination of this type of information should help States in developing their plans.

There have been a number of reports and studies that have indicated that alcohol and drug abuse are primary causal factors of juvenile crime. In addition, there has been much anecdotal information relating to the incidence of hate crimes committed by juveniles. The committee believes that collecting this data will establish a profile of hate crime offenses, the offenders, and their victims, and provide information regarding the relationship of drug and alcohol abuse as well as other factors relevant to juvenile crime, and will prove to be essential in addressing the needs of delinquent juveniles.

Research, demonstration, and evaluation functions

The bill requires the Administrator to make available to the public the results of all evaluations and research and demonstration activities authorized under the Act. The Office funds a number of innovative studies and demonstration projects. Results of these studies have not always been made available to either practitioners in the field of juvenile justice or the general public. The committee intends that the results of all studies be disseminated to all interested parties.

The bill also authorizes the Administrator to support research related to a better understanding of the commission of hate crimes by juveniles and designed to identify educational programs aimed at preventing and reducing hate crimes. The Administrator is also authorized to collect and disseminate uniform national statistics concerning all aspects of juveniles as victims and offenders and the processing and treatment of certain juveniles in the juvenile justice system.

Technical assistance and training functions

H.R. 5194 authorizes the Administrator to provide training for persons working with juveniles who commit hate crimes and to provide technical assistance and training to State and local governments in adopting model standards for providing health care to incarcerated juveniles.

Establishment of training program

The bill includes training designed to prevent hate crimes in the training curriculum of the Institute, expanding the authority for the Administrator to develop, conduct and provide training programs for juvenile justice professionals and volunteers who work with youthful hate crime offenders.

Curriculum for training program

The bill makes clear that the Administrator's own training program within the Institute shall include methods and techniques of responding to bias crimes, and the curriculum for this training program shall include training designed to prevent juveniles from committing hate crimes. Recognizing that minority youth are disproportionately represented among juvenile offenders, the committee believes this training can help juvenile justice workers be prepared to address the special needs of some minority youth in the criminal justice system and promote awareness of cultural differences that will help enable juvenile justice professionals to better understand the diversity of offenders with whom they work.

Special studies and reports

The bill directs the Administrator to conduct a study assessing available federal, State and local data relating to hate crimes.

The bill also requires the Administrator to conduct a national assessment of youthful hate crimes, including an analysis of the perpetrators, their motives, victims of hate crimes, the type of law enforcement investigation conducted, and the penalties imposed for these crimes. Sources to be used to conduct this study should be hate crime data and crime reports compiled by State law enforcement agencies and data collected by the Federal Bureau of Investigation under the Federal Hate Crime Statistics Act (P.L. 101-275).

H.R. 5194 also requires the Administrator to conduct a study of the incidence of violence committed by or against juveniles in urban and rural areas in the U.S. Recent events, such as the Los Angeles riots following the Rodney King verdict, have brought to a head the need for an intense interventive and preventive strategy for our urban areas. Every day the news has at least one story about youth violence. According to the "OJJDP Update on Statistics", over the last half of the 1980's juvenile arrests for violent crimes increased at a greater pace than adults. The 1989-90 arrest trends show an increase in the number of juvenile arrests for murder and nonnegligent manslaughter (26 percent), robbery (17 percent) and aggravated assault (16 percent).

In planning for these preventive and interventive strategies, it is imperative that we have at hand data on the causal factors of this increase in youth violence and any existing strategies that are effective. It is the committee's intent that the Administrator implement this study immediately in order to direct available resources to quickly adopting interventions that can help prevent or reduce juvenile violence.

Special emphasis prevention and treatment programs

The bill provides for the inclusion of home-based treatment, parent self-help and hate crime prevention programs as special emphasis prevention and treatment programs in an effort to involve families in the rehabilitative process.

The committee finds that crimes motivated by bias, prejudice and hatred are particularly prevalent among juveniles and therefore merit special attention and special response from public officials and law enforcement authorities. Several recent studies reveal that a disproportionate number of bias related crimes are committed by youth. One study prepared by Abt Associates for the National Institute of Justice found that "at least half the people arrested for bias crimes are older teenagers and young adults . . ." And in 11 out of 13 of the Anti-Defamation League's annual "Audits of Anti-Semitic Incidents," over 80 percent of those arrested for bias crimes have been under the age of 21.

Given the impact of hate crimes on our society and the considerable involvement in hate crimes by juveniles, the committee believes that juvenile justice system must be prepared to deal effectively with hate crime offenders. The committee has approved a series of amendments designed to accomplish this objective.

The amendments require the Administrator to establish at least one special emphasis program designed to prevent and reduce the incidence of hate crimes committed by juveniles. Such programs may include the development of model education programs to increase the awareness of the impact of hate crimes on victims, as well as innovative sentencing programs for youthful offenders to provide alternatives to incarceration, including community service and restitution programs. Among the objectives of these community initiatives would be to encourage education to combat prejudice and better appreciate the impact of these crimes on the victims through interaction with members of the targeted community.

One example of a model education program that has already demonstrated considerable success is "A World of Difference," a program developed by the Anti-Defamation League, which is designed to educate students about the roots and consequences of prejudice, to stimulate critical thinking and discussion about discrimination, to provide opportunities to learn about other people's racial, religious, and ethnic heritage, and to strengthen self-esteem among young people through increased understanding of their own heritage.

In addition, H.R. 5194 requires law-related education (LRE) programs be targeted to at-risk youth.

The law-related education program has proven to be a highly successful program particularly when targeted to at-risk youth. The committee received testimony from the Coordinated National Law-Related Program (CNLRP), a provider of law-related education services nationally, documenting the merits of LRE and, in particular, CNLRP's efforts in addressing at-risk urban youth. In its testimony CNLRP maintained that, "Addressing the needs of this country's at-risk youth is a national priority" and recommended that, "greater emphasis be placed on at-risk youth". The committee agrees that law-related education is a valuable tool in the prevention of delinquent acts and as an intervention method for youths already involved in the juvenile justice system. Given limited resources, the committee recognizes the merits of LRE and intends that the administrator target programs that serve high-risk youth.

The bill also prohibits the Administrator from making any grants to the Department of Justice or to any unit that is part of the Department of Justice. Given the administration's attempts to use OJJDP funds for other Justice Department priorities not mandated in the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act and the administration's recommended cuts in the OJJDP budget over the past 4 years, the committee intends that those funds appropriated for the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention be expended for the purposes of carrying out the Act.

H.R. 5194 also supports programs that work with families of incarcerated juveniles, take into consideration the special needs of families with limited English speaking ability, and assist in identifying learning difficulties (including learning disabilities).

Considerations for approval of applications

H.R. 5194 requires that all discretionary grants be made on a competitive basis except in the event that the President declares a state of emergency or disaster. The committee heard testimony regarding the need to eliminate the non-competitive process for discretionary grants. Ira Schwartz, former Administrator of OJJDP, and other witnesses testified that there have been a number of abuses of the non-competitive process over the years by the Administrator directing funds to specific programs and specific organizations. While many of the programs or organizations funded through this process have been worthwhile, the competitive process assures that all eligible entities have equal opportunity to compete for available funding. This is consistent with the general principle which fosters competition for Federal grants and contracts.

The committee recognizes that certain national organizations have unique capabilities to provide assistance under the Act. These organizations include the National Coalition of State Juvenile Justice Advisory Groups in carrying out the functions of section 241(f)(2), and the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, in providing training for judges and others who work with the juvenile courts. These nonprofit organizations have provided unique juvenile justice and delinquency prevention training to individuals across the country for several years. Their unique capabilities have been consistently recognized by Congress and OJJDP. It is the intent of the committee that so long as these organizations are able to continue those roles effectively, the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention should continue to support their efforts and the Administrator should recognize the unique capabilities of these organizations and the need to maintain these capabilities.

Gang-Free Schools and communities; community-based gang intervention

The bill amends Part D of Title II of the Act, to create a Part entitled "Gang-Free Schools and Communities; Community-Based Intervention," eliminating the Part D gang provisions in the current law. The reasons for this change are twofold; (i) since 1988, the current law has funded needed research, but little else that would assist local communities in dealing with gang problems; and (ii) the committee believes that the Act will be more effective by placing less emphasis on drug activities (which tend to be a major focus of law enforcement) and greater emphasis on helping youth, families, and communities.

This new part is designed to complement and expand existing Federal, State, and local efforts to address a difficult and increasingly serious problem. To date, the principal Federal responses have been law enforcement measures. During the last year, the Department of Justice, through the Office of Justice Programs, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, substantially increased its intelligence and enforcement efforts. The bill is designed to ensure that, while these agencies are working to reduce the illegal activities of gangs, local communities have resources to prevent youths from joining gangs, to reduce the influence of gangs, and to address the needs of at-risk youths. As authorized by this new subpart, educational services, when coordinated with social and mental health services available through community-based youth services organizations and other public agencies, can become very effective gang prevention and intervention tools.

Subpart I of this new part, which contains the Gang-Free Schools and Communities portion, authorizes the Administrator of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to make grants to local school districts, and other local public and private agencies, institutions, and organizations to support a broad variety of prevention and intervention activities related to juvenile gangs. Authorized activities include—

1. prevention services and activities, such as: individual, peer, family, and group counseling; life skills and independent living training; education and social services to meet the needs of kids who would otherwise look to gangs for support and a sense of “belonging”; and public awareness and training to help parents and other significant adults provide constructive alternatives for these youth;

2. the development (in cooperation with law enforcement and community-based organizations) of policies and activities in schools to promote and maintain a safe learning environment;

3. services to help current and potential gang members to obtain appropriate education instruction (along with counseling and other social support services) in or outside the regular school program:

4. alternatives to gangs which involve at-risk youth in lawful and constructive activities; and

5. services for previously adjudicated youth (i.e., for delinquent acts associated with gangs) to ensure that they are provided necessary assistance and support during their re-adjustment to community living.

In making grants, the Administrator is directed to give priority consideration to applications which (i) are submitted by, or that substantially involve, local school districts, (ii) substantially involve families and are broadly supported by agencies, organizations, and institutions in the community, and (iii) are based on the incidence and severity of gang-related crimes in the community.

The committee emphasizes the importance of fostering cooperation among organizations and institutions in the community—especially between community-based organizations that provide services to youth and the schools. Accordingly, as described above, the bill requires that priority be given to applications submitted by, or involving, schools. While this language is intended to encourage the active involvement of schools in these programs, it should not be interpreted to require that grants only be made to school districts. Instead, the Administrator should grant a priority based on the amount and apparent quality of the collaboration described in the application, whether it is submitted by a school district or by another agency, institution, or organization in the community.

The Administrator is authorized to reserve not more than 15 percent of the annual appropriation for the subpart to support research, evaluation, and information dissemination activities. The remaining 85 percent of the appropriation must be used for grants to provide services. This is not intended to be a demonstration program.

Subpart II, the Community-Based Gang Intervention portion of the new part D, contains provisions similar to subpart I but gives priority to community-based organizations and includes provisions to foster the development of regional task forces involving state, local, and community-based organizations to coordinate enforcement, intervention, and treatment efforts for juvenile gang members and to curtail interstate activities of gangs.

Finally a youth may receive assistance under both subparts I and II until he or she attains the age of 22 years. This is a change from current law and reflects the reality that many of the youths involved in gangs are older than 18 years.

Authorization of appropriations

The bill authorizes appropriations (for other than part D) of $150 million for fiscal year 1993, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1994, 1995, and 1996. Appropriations are also authorized for part D at $25 million each for Subparts I and II for fiscal year 1993 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1994, 1995, and 1996.

TITLE II

Minimum allotment

H.R. 5194 increases the minimum annual allotment to states and territories from $75,000 to $100,000 and from $30,000 to $45,000, respectively. In increasing the minimum allotments, the committee recognizes the increasing costs of providing emergency services to runaway and homeless youth and their families on a round-the-clock basis, and the effects of inflation on the operating costs of these programs over the past four years.

Geographic distances and the necessity of making services accessible to at-risk youth in sparsely populated communities have forced some States to divide the minimum allotment among several small programs within the State. This shotgun approach has resulted in some programs receiving grants well under $20,000. Increasing the minimum allotments to States and territories would allow for important increases to existing programs, while posing minimal burden on existing programs in other States.

The committee continues to see expenditures for the Runaway and Homeless Youth Program as a cost effective and preventative investment in assisting the Nation's troubled youth and their families.

Street-based and home-based services

Sections 202 and 203 of H.R. 5194 create two new discretionary programs: Street-Based and Home-Based services.

The committee received testimony and data which indicates that while programs serve a majority of those youth who contact local runaway and homeless youth shelters, a significant number of youth never make contact with the shelters. Estimates suggest that only thirty percent of the population of at-risk youth reach shelter programs.

The committee intends that Street-Based Service programs, designed to reach youth where they congregate and live, will improve the overall effectiveness of the basic center grant by reaching youth who would not otherwise contact a runaway and homeless youth center.

Similarly, while temporary shelter services meet the needs of many at-risk youth who need services outside the home, many others who can remain at home go unserved. The committee received testimony which indicates that serving youth before they have left home, or assisting them in reuniting with their families, is a cost-effective and preventative means of serving youth who might otherwise fall into a life on the street. The committee received background data which further illustrates that in-home services, while often more effective than out-of-home services for some youth, have not been widely available to most youth because of limited funding available to the programs.

The committee anticipates that both of these optional programs will be important adjuncts to the Basic Center grant program, and will improve the overall effectiveness of this Federal effort by providing a more comprehensive network of services.

Parental involvement

The committee heard from several witnesses that one of the best ways to get runaway and homeless youth back on the right track is to get the youth's parents involved. To this end, the committee has added to current law a requirement for Basic Center grantees to develop a plan for encouraging the involvement of parents of runaway and homeless youth in counseling.

Language and cultural minorities

The committee heard testimony at its field hearing in Portland that many youth of foreign descent, and their families, who are in need of services either do not know that these services are available due to language problems, or do not avail themselves of the services because of cultural biases. The amendments to Title III create a language and cultural minority outreach requirement for Basic Centers and add the same to the outreach requirement that already exists for Transitional Living.

Coordination with home school

The committee bill would amend current law to enhance the existing requirement that the Basic Centers work with school system personnel by providing for coordination between the Center and the youth's home school to encourage and assist the youth to remain current with curricula at that school. Successful cooperation will prevent the frustration that youth often experience when returning to their home school because they have fallen behind in the lesson plan.

Grant priority

In addition to increasing the minimum state and territory allocation, the committee has increased from $150,000 to $200,000 the maximum cost of grants for which priority shall be given by the Secretary in approving applications. While the unique history of this program demonstrates that highly motivated local programs can operate very effectively with a minimum Federal contribution, the fiscal reality suggests that programs can no longer operate on shoestring budgets and youth will go unserved without sufficient funding of these programs.

Grants to private entities and staffing

H.R. 5194 amends section 317 to clarify that nothing in the Act prohibits grants to private entities which are fully controlled by private boards or persons which otherwise meet the requirements of the Act. This section previously only applied to the Basic Center Grant Program.

Additionally, the committee intends to clarify that nothing in this title shall give the Federal Government control over the personnel decisions of local programs receiving funds under this title. This provision previously applied only to the Basic Center Grant Program.

Parental approval

The committee has amended current law to remove the parental approval requirement for the release of records maintained by runaway and homeless youth centers, street-based service programs, or transitional living programs. The committee received testimony which indicated that this requirement has been a barrier for youth attempting to get services from other programs. Medical records from an intake interview at a runaway and homeless youth center, for example, could not be sent to a free medical clinic without the consent of parent or a legal guardian and could deter runaway and homeless youth from seeking services.

H.R. 5194 also modifies current law by restricting access to the records a runaway and homeless youth shelter may maintain on individual youth. Such records will now be protected from access by a government agency involved in the disposition of criminal charges against a youth. Advocacy groups have indicated to the committee that such access by law enforcement agencies would be in conflict with some State laws and would have a deterrent effect on youth who would otherwise pursue services from runaway and homeless youth centers.

Reports

The committee bill modifies the report required of the Secretary to include a summary of the results of Federal evaluations of programs under the title and a description of the training of evaluation personnel. Additionally, the modification directs the Secretary to require an on-site review of each grantee no less than once every three years.

The committee believes that programs funded under this title are vital to the Nation's at-risk youth and that such programs need the guidance and evaluation that Department reports and periodic program reviews provide.

While discussions with service providers has led the committee to conclude that grantees have used Federal dollars to assist runaway and homeless youth and their families effectively, many service providers reported that they would like increased involvement and technical assistance from trained Federal evaluators. Some service providers also reported that their projects had never been visited by evaluators and further, that their evaluators seemed to have little understanding or knowledge of accounting and other procedures used to report on activities carried out through the Act.

Authorization of appropriations

H.R. 5194 includes an authorization of appropriations of $75,000,000 for all but Part B (including the Basic Center Grant Program) and the Rural Youth Demonstration Project, $25,000,000 for Part B (including the Transitional Living Grant Program), and $1,000,000 for each of the next four fiscal years for a Rural Youth Demonstration Project.

In considering the appropriate level of authorized appropriations for this title, the Committee reviewed such information as the past history of appropriations, the overall financial needs of programs funded under the title, and the cost-effectiveness of the programs funded under this title which reduce the probability of further expenditures for runaway and homeless youth in subsequent years.

For the past four years the Act authorized such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title. While this level is unlimited, the committee believes that authorizing a specific dollar amount at this time provides necessary guidance to the Appropriations Committee by illustrating what the committee considers to be required by programs around the country and indicates what the committee expects is a realistic level.

While the appropriations level has risen slightly over the last four years, the number of programs has increased at a faster pace leaving existing programs with smaller grant awards. In addition the impact of inflation of the last four years has reduced the purchasing value of each grant dollar.

The Committee understands that the cost of incarcerating juveniles in adult jails far exceeds any cost that might be incurred by a runaway and homeless youth center or transitional living program. The average annual cost of incarceration in adult jails ranges from $25,000 to $45,000 per person.

National Communications System

H.R. 5194 reserves funds for a National Communications System from the authorization for the Basic Center Grant Program. The National Communications System, a toll-free, twenty-four hour hot-line, allows runaway and homeless youth to contact their families and in turn provides parents with a means of communicating with their children. Parents regularly leave messages with hot-line staff in the event that their child may call the toll-free number. In addition, the hot-line can transfer calls from a youth to service providers in the youth's immediate area.

The committee continues to believe that this service will not exist without federal leadership and support. The committee has highlighted the need and the importance of this national effort by expanding the National Communications System to cover all programs and activities funded under this title.

In order to fund the expansion, H.R. 5194 reserves $912,500 for fiscal year 1993, of which $125,000 is available for the acquisition of communications equipment, $826,900 for fiscal year 1994, $868,300 for fiscal year 1995, and $911,700 for fiscal year 1996.

Coordination, training, and research and development

Recognizing the importance of encouraging a continuum of care for runaway and homeless youth, the committee has consolidated the coordination, training, and research and development sections of existing law into a new Part D. Such a consolidation will unify existing efforts to match innovative new approaches to serving youth with the training and technical assistance to programs with these new approaches in mind. The committee continues to believe that there are diverse solutions to diverse problems, and that the leadership and innovation of a program in one community should enhance the effectiveness of programs in other communities, and that this Federal statute should facilitate such exchanges.

Rural youth demonstration project

The committee, in response to testimony and background information received at its field hearing in Grand Island, Nebraska, has established a demonstration project aimed at assisting counties with large geographic distances between population centers to meet the needs of troubled youth.

For rural youth, access to runaway and homeless youth services has been traditionally inhibited because they are often 60, 70, 80 miles or more from the nearest shelter program. A troubled youth generally doesn't even come to the attention of intervention programs until the youth becomes involved with the law enforcement system. Too frequently this doesn't happen until the youth is transported away from home to the nearest detention facility or lock-up, thereby reducing the effectiveness of runaway and homeless youth programs as an alternative to the juvenile justice or law enforcement system.

In an effort to devise strategies for successful programs to meet the needs of rural runaway and homeless youth, the Committee, by unanimously accepting an amendment offered by Representative Bill Barrett at the subcommittee markup, has authorized $1,000,000 for each of the next four years for demonstration projects in rural areas. The funds will go to not more than ten States, and each State may receive no more than two grant awards.

The committee expects that the Department will report to the Congress and the President on the activities of projects funded under this part by September 30th of each fiscal year for which grants are awarded.

TITLE IV

Modification of confidentiality provision regarding State grants under Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act

The committee recognizes that there is a problem with State confidentiality laws that in some cases forbid child welfare workers from sharing information about a certain child's case with other government agencies. For example, in a well publicized case in

New York a probation officer twice asked child welfare workers if there was any reason why a mother should not be released from probation, and even though there had been recent reports of abuse of that woman's child the child welfare worker declined to comment citing the confidentiality laws.

Currently, the Federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) requires the States to keep child abuse records confidential in order to receive grants under the Act. Some States have passed strict confidentiality laws or strictly interpret existing confidentiality laws in response to the Federal mandate. This title would amend the Federal law to require States to provide for inter-agency sharing of child abuse records to facilitate a more comprehensive, coordinated approach by States in protecting children against abuse.

It also would emphasize that the confidentiality right in the child abuse records belongs to the child. This is important because there have been several instances where a child has died possibly as a result of the negligence of the child welfare workers, yet the child protective services still will not release information regarding the death of the child. In other words, the child protective services will hide behind the cloak of the confidentiality laws, even though after the child dies there is no need to protect the privacy of the child.

The second recurring complaint of child protection services is the lack of accountability in the child protective services. There is little public accountability of these agencies, partly because of the confidentiality laws, but also because there is little governmental oversight of these large bureaucracies.

This title would express the sense of Congress that States should create autonomous interagency, multi-disciplinary teams to review cases of death thought to have been caused by child abuse, or egregious cases of suspected child abuse where there is evidence that the child's case is not being handled adequately by the child protection services. These review teams would then make recommendations regarding an individual case or on systemic changes that are necessary. Currently eight States have established, by statute, review teams that examine only child fatalities. This title expresses the sense of Congress that these review teams should go a step further and also examine serious child abuse cases before the child dies.

OVERSIGHT STATEMENT

In compliance with clause 2(1)(3)(A) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, this report embodies the finding and recommendations of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, established pursuant to clause 2(b)(1) of rule X of the Rule of the House of Representatives and rule 18(a) of the Rules of the Committee on Education and Labor. Pursuant to its responsibilities, the committee has determined that legislation should be enacted as set forth in H.R. 5194.

In conjunction with the committee's jurisdictional matter action on this legislation, communication was received from the Committee on the Judiciary concerning changes in operations within the Department of Justice resulting from changes in law included in H.R. 5194. That exchange of communications is set forth below:

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR,
Washington, DC, June 26, 1992.

Hon. JACK BROOKS,
*Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.*

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write with reference to your letter concerning action by the Committee on Education and Labor in reporting H.R. 5194, making amendments to the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.

I fully appreciate your concern over the need for continued consultation between the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP), the National Institute of Justice, and the Bureau of Justice Statistics, notwithstanding the proposed removal of OJJDP from the Office of Justice Programs in an effort to enhance the effectiveness of OJJDP. I assure you that the committee's report on this legislation will reflect our shared intention in that regard. In addition, I will include your letter concerning this matter in the committee report.

With kind regards,
Sincerely,

WILLIAM D. FORD,
Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, June 15, 1992.

Hon. WILLIAM D. FORD,
*Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor,
Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.*

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing in regard to a provision of H.R. 5194, making amendments to the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974, which was recently ordered reported by the Committee on Education and Labor. A provision of H.R. 5194 would remove the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) from the Department of Justice's Office of Justice Programs and establish a direct reporting relationship with the Attorney General.

As you know, under current law the Office of Justice Programs has certain responsibilities in regard to its component bureaus, including OJJDP. In addition, the present authorizing statute, 42 U.S.C. § 3789(i), calls for consultation between the National Institute of Justice, the Bureau of Justice Statistics and OJJDP "in developing and implementing programs in the juvenile justice and delinquency prevention field." It is my hope that such consultation will continue notwithstanding the removal of OJJDP from the Office of Justice Programs, and I would welcome report language expressing your Committee's intentions in that regard.

I would very much appreciate your including this letter in your Committee's report on H.R. 5194. Thank you for your assistance in this matter, and with every good wish, I am

Sincerely,

JACK BROOKS,
Chairman.

INFLATIONARY IMPACT STATEMENT

In compliance with clause 2(1)(4) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the committee estimates that the enactment of H.R. 5194 will have little inflationary impact on the prices and costs in the operation of the national economy. It is the judgment of the committee that the inflationary impact of this legislation as a component of the Federal budget is negligible.

OVERSIGHT FINDING AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

In compliance with clause 2(1)(3)(D) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the committee states that no findings or recommendations of the Committee on Government Operations were submitted to the committee.

The costs of this bill fall within budget functions 750 and 500.

Basis of estimate: The estimate assumes that the Congress will appropriate the full amounts authorized for each fiscal year. For programs with specific amounts authorized for 1993 and such sums authorizations for subsequent years, CPO projected the indefinite authorizations by adjusting the 1993 level for inflation. For Title III of the bill we projected the indefinite 1993-1997 authorizations by inflating the 1992 appropriation, which was about $8.5 million. The outlay estimates are based on the historical spending rates for these or similar activities. Detailed information is shown in the table below.

ADMINISTRATION VIEWS

Set forth below are views of the Department of Health and Human Services on the bill, H.R. 5194.

SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES,
Washington, DC, June 23, 1992.

Hon. WILLIAM FORD,
*Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.*

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We take this opportunity to inform you of this Department's views on H.R. 5194, the "Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Amendments of 1992", as reported by the House Committee on Education and Labor. The bill amends programs under the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 (JJDP), the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act, the Missing Children's Assistance Act, and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA).

In summary, we strongly oppose the provision in the bill that amends the State law confidentiality requirement of CAPTA. In addition, we prefer the Administration's proposal to consolidate three programs for runaway and homeless youth to the corresponding provisions of H.R. 5194, although we have no major objections to the amendments to the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act apart from our objection to the excessive authorization levels. Finally, we defer to the Department of Justice regarding amendments to those provisions of the JJDP which it administers.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT

We strongly oppose section 402 of H.R. 5194, amending section 107(b)(4) of CAPTA. That provision currently requires States, as a condition of receiving CAPTA grants, to "provide for methods to preserve the confidentiality of all records in order to protect the rights of the child and of the child's parents or guardians". This broad principle that the confidentiality of both children and their parents and guardians shall be protected, in combination with other statutory provisions for appropriate disclosures, has been interpreted in regulations to restrict disclosure to a very narrow and specific list of persons who have a clear responsibility to protect the welfare of children. We believe that this is an appropriate rule: the scheme of confidentiality protection balanced with essential, yet narrow, disclosures is essentially correct.

Section 402 of the bill, by reframing this rule in terms of disclosure, would eliminate any broad statement of principle that confidentiality should be protected. Specifically, it would eliminate the fundamental language regarding the confidentiality rights of the child's parents or guardians. This safeguard is of critical importance, for example in situations where a parent or guardian is the subject of false and malicious accusations of child abuse or neglect, or where the information indicating child abuse and neglect comes to light because the parent has sought treatment for mental illness or substance abuse and disclosure would not be in the best interest of either the parent or the child.

Section 402 would explicitly permit any disclosure considered necessary to carry out the State's responsibilities to investigate allegations of child abuse or neglect and to take steps to protect abused or neglected children, with the single exception of "disclosures of the identity of the subject of a substantiated allegation", which may be made "only to the extent appropriate for purposes of * * * protection [of the child involved]". This narrow exception contains several undefined or ambiguous terms, but it is difficult to give it any reading that would not bar certain appropriate disclosures while permitting certain inappropriate ones. For example, while we cannot believe the sponsor of this provision intended this result, it would seem to us that this language could be read—

To bar disclosure (for example, to a child death review team) of the identity of the individual whose abuse caused the death of the abused child, since no disclosure could serve to "protect the child involved"; and

To provide no protection against disclosure for an individual who is the subject of an unsubstantiated false allegation.

Ambiguities in this language raise many questions: Who is the "subject" of an allegation—the abuser, the abused, or both? What is the meaning of "protection of the child involved"? Does it exclude the sibling of an abused child? What about other children with whom the abuser comes in contact? How rigorous a standard of verification is required for a "substantiated" allegation?

Given the many uncertainties presented by this language, we would expect any interpretation we might give it to be subject to legal challenge, with the result that States subject to this requirement (and persons subject to the corresponding State laws) would, for an extended period, be left in doubt as to their rights and obligations regarding confidentiality and disclosure.

For all the foregoing reasons, we are strongly of the view that this amendment is significantly inferior to current law, and should be dropped from the bill. It is our belief that this language was included because of the misconception that the current statute barred certain appropriate disclosures. This is not the case, and the Department would be happy to work with the Committee to clarify these matters.

RUNAWAY AND HOMELESS YOUTH

As an alternative to title III of H.R. 5194, we urge the House to consider the Administration's runaway and homeless youth bill, H.R. 5261. This proposal would consolidate three Federal programs serving runaway and homeless youth into a single, comprehensive grant program. This consolidation would permit provision of more comprehensive services at the local level, provide greater flexibility to local service providers, and reduce administrative burdens associated with applying for and administering three separate Federal grants. Total authorizations of appropriations under the new comprehensive authority would be maintained at the FY 1992 level of total appropriations for the three separate programs.

In contrast, the authorization levels proposed in H.R. 5194 for programs under the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act represent significant increases over current funding levels and are, therefore, inconsistent with the budget ceilings established in the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990. Given the size of the Federal deficit, we recommend that the authorization for these programs be held to the FY 1992 funding level. Further, we oppose the amount of the earmark for the National Communication System because it is a significant increase over the $750,000 earmarked in FY 1992 and would further restrict the coordination activities, and research, demonstration and evaluation projects, all important activities authorized by the Act.

JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION

Finally, although we defer to the Department of Justice regarding amendments to the JJDPA, we note that the new Gang-Free Schools and Communities Program proposed in H.R. 5194 would substantially duplicate the Drug Education and Prevention Relating to Youth Gangs Program administered by this Department. This new program creates an unnecessary, separate funding stream for local projects with the same purpose.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that there is no objection to the presentation of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

LOUIS W. SULLIVAN, M.D.

TITLE III—RUNAWAY AND HOMELESS YOUTH ACT

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the “Runaway and Homeless Youth Act”.

FINDINGS

SEC. 302. The Congress hereby finds that—

[(1) the number of juveniles who leave and remain away from home without parental permission has increased to alarming proportions, creating a substantial law enforcement problem for the communities inundated, and significantly endangering the young people who are without resources and live on the street;]

(1) juveniles who leave and remain away from home without parental permission, are at risk of developing serious health and other problems because they lack sufficient resources to obtain care and may live on the street for extended periods thereby endangering themselves and creating a substantial law enforcement problem for communities in which they congregate;

* * * * *

(4) the problem of locating, detaining, and returning runaway children should not be the responsibility of already overburdened police departments and juvenile justice authorities; [and]

(5) in view of the interstate nature of the problem, it is the responsibility of the Federal Government to develop accurate reporting of the problem nationally and to develop an effective system of [temporary care outside the law enforcement structure.] care (including preventive services, emergency shelter services, and extended residential shelter) outside the welfare system and the law enforcement system;

(6) runaway and homeless youth have a disproportionate share of health, behavioral, and emotional problems compared to the general population of youth, but have less access to health care and other appropriate services;

(7) early intervention services (such as home-based services) are needed to prevent runaway and homeless youth from becoming involved in the juvenile justice system and other law enforcement systems; and

(8) street-based services that target runaway and homeless youth where they congregate are needed to reach youth who require assistance but who would not otherwise avail themselves of such assistance or services without street-based outreach.

(b)(1) * * *

(2) Subject to paragraph (3), the amount allotted under paragraph (1) with respect to each State for a fiscal year shall be not less than [$75,000] $100,000, except that the amount allotted to the Virgin Islands of the United States, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be not less than [$30,000] $45,000 each.

(3) If, as a result of paragraph (2), the amount allotted under paragraph (1) with respect to a State for a fiscal year would be less than the aggregate amount of grants made under this part to recipients in such State for fiscal year [1988] 1992, then the amounts allotted to satisfy the requirements of such paragraph shall be reduced pro rata to the extent necessary to allot under paragraph (1) with respect to such State for the fiscal year an amount equal to the aggregate amount of grants made under this part to recipients in such State for fiscal year [1988] 1992.

* * * * *

[(c) The Secretary is authorized to provide on-the-job training to local runaway and homeless youth center personnel and coordinated networks of local law enforcement, social service, and welfare personnel to assist such personnel in recognizing and providing for learning disabled and other handicapped juveniles.]
